

2020 Nippon Professional Baseball Season Set

Much like every other sport, the events of the year did make this season different than originally planned. The original schedule called for 143 games for each team, 25 vs the other teams in your league and 3 games against each team in the other league for interleague play.

The other major change is that all games were a maximum of 10 innings, rather than the traditional 12. This led to a bunch more ties than in recent years.

Unlike MLB, however, the season did end up being relatively robust. The teams played 120 games (24 against the teams in their league) each. While less than originally scheduled, 120 games has been an amount of games played in a season historically (though very much on the low end). Thus, I think this season is pretty reasonable to make cards for in the “normal” way.

The playoff (Climax Series) was also affected. Rather than the 3 teams per league, only the top 2 teams advanced to the Pacific League Climax Series, and it was “best-of-5” (with the league winner getting a 1 game advantage and home field for all games) rather than “best-of-7”. The Central League did not have a Climax Series, as they were worried that there would be too many rainouts to make up, given the larger number of teams that don’t play in Domes.

Also, unlike other seasons, all games were played in the home parks of the teams. Typically, a small number of games are played in more rural areas as a way of spreading the game. The only games not played in the stadiums referred to on the team cards were 3 games played by the Orix Buffaloes in their nominal 2nd home in Kobe.
