The 1954 season most resembled baseball. The bases were at 85 feet and the mound was 60'. In midseason of 1954 the league switched to a 9 inchball from a 10 inch ball in mid-season and shortened many of the fences. This resulted in a huge rise in batting averages and homeruns. I chose to do the 1953 season for a couple of reasons. The first is that that league had 6 teams, not the 5 in 1954. The batting averages were low but seemed more reasonable than in 1954. In 1953 the basepaths were 75 feet and the mound was 56 feet away. There was no ball switch in the middle of the season. The data is stable. Most information was taken from www.aagpbl.org

Game play notes- The game seemed to play like the dead ball era: few homers and few pitchers. Each teams main pitchers averaged more than 7 innings per game pitched, starts and relief appearances. One pitcher average 8.5 innings an outing. It would appear that there were many complete games. Pitchers who pitched fewer games pitched fewer inning per game leading me to believe that if the starter didn't have it that day they would finish the game off for a few innings. Finding exact positions was somewhat difficult the reading but I have done suggests that players played many positions. Rosters were limited to 15 players. The first game of double headers was 7 innings and perhaps the second game as well but I could not confirm that. Players were not rated on defense. Use neutral ratings. Ballparks were not rated either. In, 1954 the fences were moved in at most parks. You may choose to play each park as big.
