

The Senior Professional Baseball Association was a league that lasted a season and a half from 1989 through 1990. It was always an intriguing league for me because it was pre-internet, had some games on television, cool uniforms, and players from my youth. In some ways it was a return to my early tabletop playing days. As a kid, I would make up team names, make schedule, and populate the teams with a box of random APBA cards that my dad gave me. That was this league. I've seen a 1990 season of this league with some APBA type cards, but none of the inaugural season, 1989/90.

When I got History Maker Baseball and knew I could rate my own teams I knew this was the league I wanted to do. But, I had no statistics. There were sets of baseball cards but I didn't have those and they would be incomplete. About three years ago, I received an excel workbook from a man named Kenn Tomash (kenn.com) who used to cover the league. He has an interesting sports website that's worth a look. The stats, he said weren't official, but enough of them matched the stats on the baseball cards and other sources that it was close enough to official. It has been an off and on again process with this set but the Covid19 break has given me the time to finish the set.

Some design notes – the defense was bad in this league and I had no errors reported. I estimated the errors per game by finding a correlation between the ERA – Runs allowed per game of MLB teams and applying the equation to estimate errors to come up with errors for teams in this league. I also tried to do 'team' errors as much as I could because I didn't know who played good defense. 2 teams had 4.5 irons. I gave each player a semi – iron rating, I didn't differentiate. I read a couple of books about the league and when I had to make judgements, I used the books that described good plays or bad plays and adjusted like that. I also used images of players from cards to see if they looked like they could still play defense if a team required some blank ratings.

I also made combined cards for players who played on multiple teams and put them onto the final team they played with. There are no transactions page with this league.

I put the player's age on the card for two reasons. One, it's a senior league and I thought ages would be important context. Also, league rules stated that players under the age of 35 could only be used as catchers. 35 was the minimum age for players, and for catchers it was 32. I did find two players with questionable age, Wes Clements, that appears to be 31 and Felix 'Ike' Pettaway 34.

There were some things that were difficult to replicate statistically. I used the sigma and delta to come closer to achieving some things. I also have some notes for a few players that may say something like *All EBH are doubles. This would mean that any time they get an extra base hit is a double.

On the cards you see some slash lines to give you an idea of player usage. For hitters it is games/at bats and for pitchers it is games/games started/innings pitched.

Positions are a best guess between someone's lineup I found on a game site, the league pre-season year book, and my reading.

Joe Minckberg for West Palm Beach did not play minor league baseball. I do not know what hand he batted. He only had 11 at bats. Use a decider die if necessary.

The DH was used but I included blank pitcher batting cards in case they are needed.
