2020 "X-League" for SECOND SEASON Pro Football Game

By Keith Avallone, PLAAY Games, LLC

As many in the PLAAY Games community know, I've always been a fan of alternate pro sports leagues, especially football. So it's with a great deal of satisfaction that I present something different for your tabletop sports adventures: the 2020 X-League Projection for SECOND SEASON Pro Football Game! I don't want to spend a lot of time explaining, because that's less time to be able to PLAAY. But there are some things that you probably will want to know about this set...

This set is based on the soon-to-launch XFL. Uses rosters as of 1/23/20, which was as late as I could push it and still make the January Sports PING publication deadline. So certainly some players have switched teams--apologies in advance for replay purists.

There was necessarily much guesswork on starters, projected individual performances and, well, pretty much everything. Obviously, finder columns weren't really feaible, so they were omitted. To create the teams, I relied on as many sources as I could dig up, including fantasy XFL projections, team scouting reports, game reports from the XFL's dress-rehearsal "exhibition season," details from the ill-fated AAF (many former AAF players are playing in the XFL--with the notable exceptions of Johnny Manziel and Trent Richardson). It's highly likely that I'll turn out to be way off on a good number of guesses. Still, that's part of the charm and fun of this set. It's designed to create an ALTERNATE, alternate pro football league, populated with real players. I'm pretty sure we've achieved that goal.

Rather than recoil from the idea that some players will be mis-rated, I figured why not embrace it? So, I've built in an "X-factor" that will make for additional unpredictibiliy and fun, and will basically guarantee that YOUR X-league will be different from anybody else's. More on that in a moment.

You'll also notice that, compared to typical NFL season ratings, these teams are noticeably poorly-rated. This is intentional: when playing this set, you should get the same feel you'd get from watching the real XFL (or the AAF, USFL, early AFL, or any other start-up pro football league). Most of the players are deficient--but that doesn't mean the football won't be entertaining. There will be plays made, in addition to plays NOT made. And, since all teams are rated on the same sliding scale, you should enjoy a very competitive league experience.

Now that "X-factor" I was talking about. Here's how it works. Three players on each team have been designated as "X-players." They're highlighted on each team's sheet. Think of them as unknowns among the unknown, players who might do really well--or not. When the game book reading calls for the first ratings check for these players, you will consider the reading an automatic "yes," regardless of what the player's rating actually is on paper. He'll retain that rating for that aspect of play for the rest of the game. EXAMPLE: Ray Ray Davison, middle linebacker for Dallas. He's rated 0 / 0+ but is highlighted as an X-player. The FIRST time the game book asks for box F on a play result, consider the answer "yes." So, if it asks "F rated 2 / pass?" The answer will be "yes," and you'll use the "2" result from the game book. Additionally, Davison will remain a "2" on pass defense for the rest of the game. He'll be rated 0+ on run defense. Note that the first reference could well be, "F rated 0 / pass?" Again, the answer would be "yes"--not a problem in THIS case, since Davison is already rated "0" pass.

What this idea does is add some superior play-making to your X-league games, instead of a steady stream of mediocre (or worse) results. Odds are the X players will have a half-dozen "star caliber" games, which will be fun to watch. Of course, if you prefer, you can ignore the X-player idea entirely. (But I do hope you give it a try!)

The XFL has made a splash with its innovative new rules, which I think will help this league have a much better chance of succeeding. You can read about them online, but I'll highlight the things that matter most when playing X-League football with SECOND SEASON...

Kickoff Line-ups: the XFL will have a much different kickoff alignment than the NFL, with the kickoff and coverage teams lining up at the return teams 35 yard-line, and the kicker kicking the ball from his own 25. It will LOOK very different, but from a SECOND SEASON standpoint, just use the ratings provided and everything will work out fine.

No fair catches on punts: If the game book calls for a fair catch, ignore it. There will be penalties against the kicking team if the return man is not allowed a five-yard "cushion" for fielding the ball. There's no representation of that in the SS game book, but if you like you can roll a die on any punt return under 5 yards--if it's a "6," consider that the reason the return was so poor was because the kicking team tackler was too close--10 yard penalty.

Continuously running clock: In the XFL there will be no clock stoppage until the two-minute warning. At that point, though, the clock stops after EVERY play. So, no clock kill will be possible--teams in the lead will be forced to continue to gain first downs if they want to keep the ball away from the opponent. While I haven't play-tested this, I feel that the continuously running clock can be represented by a sequence of 45 second play segments. Ten seconds to run the play, ten seconds to get back to the huddle, 25 second play clock. This would make for roughly 20 plays per quarter--kicking included. After the second 20-play sequence (that is, after the two-minute warning), there should be a final twelve-play sequence for each half. This would mean 52 plays per half, or just over 100 plays per game, much shorter than an NFL game. The XFL scrimmage game results seemed to support this view--they were all relatively low-scoring.

Conversions after touchdowns: No point-after kicks are allowed. Instead, you'll choose to go for one, two or three points after scoring a touchdown. One point from the two yard line, two points from the five, three points from the ten. Based on the odds of each, I think most coaches are going to default to two-point tries. (Which is why I would move a one-point conversion attempt to the half-yard line, if I were the XFL commissioner.) The only issue I see here would be for SECOND SEASON "Express." Here, I would say three-point conversions originate from Zone 2, two-point conversions fom Zone 1. For a one-point conversion, I'd just roll a die: "1" through "4," sucessful, "5" or "6," the one-point try fails. That would reflect historical success rates from the two yard-line; for MY league, though (one-point conversions from the half yard-line), I'd make an "express" conversion successful "1" through "5."

Overtime Shootouts: This will be VERY different. Instead of sudden death like the NFL, or a set of downs from the opponent's 35 yard line like college, the XFL will use a "shootout" mode where each team will send its offense to one goal-line and its defense to the other, and there will be simultaneous play. Each offense will get five chances to score from the opponent's five-yard line. The team who converts more of their chances wins the shootout. If it's tied, then the teams alternate attempts until one team scores and the other does not. Not 100% sure how to translate this for SECOND SEASON--I think I will have one team do their five tries, then the other team does theirs.

Questions? (Oh, I know there will be!) The e-mail address is info @plaay.com. Hope you enjoy this set!
